

A NEW WAY TO HANG

Take a peek at any gallery listing and you'll notice that Detroit's independent galleries are alive with activity this season. This includes the Brooklyn Gallery (2000 Brooklyn, Detroit) which is celebrating the opening of the space with COMPOSITE, a curious and poignant combination of medium. Tracing the formation of the self in seven parts, artists/designers Annica Cuppetelli, Michael Segal, Amy Abbott and Julie Meitz have organized a show that boasts everything under the sun, including live music and DJs, a fashion show styled by Salon Sydney, a slide and video presentation and mixed media work by Segal. This should prove to be a wild and exciting night, folks. So if you're looking for something new to do this weekend, this one is undoubtedly not to be missed! Saturday, September 23, 8 to 12p.m. Showtime at 10:30 p.m.
